

Liquid Learning

Where to go to broaden your booze horizons?

By LS staff | published Jun 30, 2011

When friends ask you what you like to drink, chances are you have a ready answer. Perhaps you're a gin guy. Perhaps you only like fruit beer. You'll probably never touch tequila again.

But how long has it been since your answer to that question changed? And when was the last time you tried drinking something different? Of course, it can be intimidating to venture beyond your comfort zone, particularly here in Singapore where every other person seems to be a brand ambassador for some spirit you've never heard of. But a number of venues—some old, some new, some that might surprise you—are going out of their way to make learning more about drink easy, and fun into the bargain. Forget stuffy wine dinners or impenetrable talk of blends, proofs and varietals—just round up some open-minded friends and go try something different. You might be surprised by what you learn.

BEER | WINE & CHAMPAGNE | COCKTAILS | SAKE | TEQUILA | WHISKEY

WINE & CHAMPAGNE (9-16% Alc)

There's a snobbery attached to wine drinking that understandably puts people off. But there's no shame in admitting you know nothing, or not as much as you'd like. With these operators you can be sure of making some great discoveries in good company.

Lim Hwee Peng School of Wine

If you're a true blue wine aficionado (or hoping to be one), go the more serious, academic route and enrol yourself in a course at Lim Hwee Peng School of Wine. Be warned: This three-month program requires real dedication and even has an exam at the end of it. Pass and you'll be deemed a Certified Specialist in Wines (CSW), so you can flaunt your credentials at the next frou-frou event you attend and impress even the most stonefaced of critics.

Log on to www.winecraftmktg.com or email hweepeng@winecraftmktg.com for more details.